IMPACT PERFORMANCE INDICATORS

Online Training

Training outline

During the initial workshop held on September 26th and 27th, 2023 in Athens, participants received foundational knowledge regarding the significance and complexities IMM, particularly within ethical finance operations.

The session also provided information on recent advancements from both European and methodological standpoints. This training builds upon previous content, continuing from where the initial workshop concluded. The primary aim is to enable ethical finance providers to craft actionable impact theses from their mission statements. For this purpose, the workshop will start with a short recap on IMM and its current context. Furthermore, it will illustrate the concept of impact from an ethical finance provider's perspective.

The core segment of the workshop will comprise a guided exercise where organizations will be assisted in translating their organizational missions into impact theses, essential for the development of an effective IMM system. Following the session, participants will receive access to presentation materials and templates to support their ongoing efforts.

Background and context

Impact measurement and management (IMM) is paramount for ethical finance providers to ensure that they are indeed delivering on their claim to generate a positive social and/or environmental impact with their activities. The field of IMM has come a long way in the last ten years and risks and impacts are easy to identify but still difficult to articulate and to quantify and many ethical finance providers still struggle with the concept and, more specifically, with its implementation.

Objectives of the training

This workshop is the second one in a series of trainings aimed at supporting ethical finance organizations in implementing IMM. It aims to enable ethical finance providers to implement initial steps in impact measurement and management. Specifically, participants will work on translating their organization's mission into practical terms on how they want to achieve this mission. By making the intentionality of their activities explicit, participant will create an impact thesis for their organization laying the ground for impact measurement and management. The third workshop (May 8), will then illustrate how to translate the impact thesis into a measurement framework and how to use the impact data for management purposes.

Methodology & approach

The workshop will combine theoretical as well as practical input and break-out groups in which participants work on their own organisations' mission and impact thesis. By sharing first results of this exercise, peer-learning and discussions will be enabled and thus contribute to the participants' learning experience.
